IESE New York Center

In 2007, IESE Business School made history when it established its New York City offices, and in 2010 opening its operations in a refurbished landmark building in mid-town Manhattan, thus becoming the first continental business school to have a physical presence on this side of the Atlantic.

The IESE New York Center will conduct executive education and management programs serving a wide range of private and public industries, as well as special conferences, workshops, continuing education and networking events for the growing IESE alumni community in North America. The facility also supports research in a number of areas relevant in the current global business climate.
