

COURSE OUTLINE

Introduction

The field of Strategy studies the drivers of persistent performance differentials among firms. The course falls into two parts. In the first part, we will establish the "fact" that these persistent performance differentials exist and cover the different theories that have attempted to explain this fact from a historical perspective. In the second part, we cover research that highlights different strategic decisions that affect these performance differentials and their persistence.

Objectives

The objective of this first-year PhD course in Strategic Management is to familiarize the students with the key theories and research questions that the Strategic Management field deals with. The course will build on and leverage the methods developed in the Research Methods course to address these questions. By the end of the course, the students should have a clear map of the field of Strategic Management, understand how to develop an interesting research question and be able to structure a research paper to address that question.

Learning Outcomes

At the end of this course, you will:

- have knowledge of the different subfields in Strategic Management
- be familiar with a number of seminal works in each of these subfields
- be able to read Strategic Management papers and evaluate their contribution to the field
- be able to assess papers' strengths and weaknesses
- be able to develop a research question and structure a research paper to address that question

Methodology

Overall Principle

Students are expected to read ALL the required readings and be prepared to discuss the material in class on the schedule indicated in the syllabus. All students should come to class with questions, topics, and issues to be raised for discussion.

We will structure each of our double sessions in two parts:

1. Discussion of the students' class memos (see below): Each student prepares 1(!) slide to present to the class his/her idea and how the idea connects to the papers of the session.
2. Discussion of the assigned papers: Although everybody should read ALL papers for each class session, we will have a discussion leader for each session. Each student will lead 1 session with the following Instructions: You should summarize each paper in MAX 2(!) slides (see below). I will briefly wrap up after each paper but expect you to contribute to the discussion through critically questioning the content and claims of the different assigned papers.

Evaluation

Evaluation will be based on class participation, discussion leadership, and on the grade of your class memos and a final exam:

- 1. Discussion Leader: the discussion leader prepares all the papers of the session for discussion. Each paper is summarized in MAX 2 slides for discussion with the group. The slides should cover:
 - (a) a summary of the research question or problem the paper addresses
 - (b) the contribution the paper makes to the field, and what you find interesting
 - (c) the method/data used (you are not supposed to become an expert in the method)
 - (d) the paper's strengths and limitations; and some interesting observations for discussionThe discussion leader is responsible for generating discussion on the papers.
- 2. Class Memo: Before each class, you are asked to prepare brief memos (MAX 2 pages, double-spaced) relating to the readings of the class and summarize it in 1 slide. The memo could focus on specific ideas and concepts you found interesting; concerns you might have with some of the ideas/arguments, empirical settings that could be explored using a theory, and connections between different approaches and/or papers. I am looking for a creative memo on the connection or disconnection between the papers assigned for the session, NOT a simple summary of the papers. Memos are due the day of class and have to be uploaded to VC by 8am on the day of class. For the final grade, I will compute the average grade across the memos, dropping the grade of the worst one. Late submissions will not be considered and receive a "0" grade.
- 3. Final Exam: Write the introduction of a new paper (3/4 pages maximum) that potentially deals with a research question that Interest you and has been identified in the readings covered in the course.

Grading:

Class participation, Discussion leadership and Class memos: 50%

Final Exam: 50%
