INTRODUCTION

The notion that companies should have a corporate purpose or mission that goes beyond financial performance has been considered in the fields of management, organisational behaviour, law and the economics of organisations for a long time. But the increasing weight of ESG dimensions in corporate governance and asset management, the call for positive societal impact, and the competition to attract and retain top talent -among other factors- draws us firmly closer to a deeper consideration of corporate purpose. At this turbulent time, ‘Corporate Purpose’ has galvanised a global movement that promises to restore trust in companies, to produce goods and services without doing harm, while providing a fair return to employees and shareholders.

Many of the world’s most valuable companies already have a clear purpose. Google had enshrined societal goals in its mission statement when it was founded in 1998: "to organize the world's information and make it universally accessible and useful", along with a mantra of "Don't be evil", somewhat echoing the “Do no harm” principle. Over a decade later, with a swelling of public discourse, the markets have joined the movement calling on businesses to make a positive contribution to society and to refocus corporate governance around a multi-stakeholder perspective. As businesses in turn, reflect on their purpose, they must also consider the questions that complicate the implementation of a vision or purpose and make it meaningful.

What defines a good corporate purpose and how can investors and board directors distinguish one that has merit from another that does not?; What makes it meaningful, the words or results?; How is it measured or assessed?; What drivers translate the purpose into a firm’s strategy and corporate culture?; What is its relationship with business performance?; Is it a luxury, distraction, marketing tool, or can it help to unify, strengthen and navigate crisis responses?; What roles do the CEO, the board of directors, employees and shareholders have in designing, strengthening, and reinforcing organisational purpose? Are there conflicting legal or market-related obstacles to be addressed when formulating a purpose?; Does it matter if the purpose is lacking any binding legal effect and operational significance?

The conference will focus on the connection between purpose and governance. It aims to bring together leading scholars, including Nobel Laureate Bengt Holmström, from the fields of strategy, organisational theory, organisational economics, finance and corporate law to address these important questions with thoughtful business executives, corporate lawyers, asset managers and board directors from a variety of sectors. Each day will commence at 15:45 (CET) to maximize audience participation from all regions. The event will encourage a dynamic interaction between scholars and corporate leaders. The schedule will allow for Q&A from the audience, as well as some smaller breakout sessions designed for IESE guests and ECGI members.
